Phase Four of the City of Kodiak's Aleutian Homes upgrade project began in earnest yesterday after a period of preparation work. City officials and Brechan Enterprises, which is under contract to conduct the work, urged residents of the Thorsheim Street area and those who walk or drive there to use caution or avoid the area if at all possible. Phase four, which will transform much of Thorsheim into a work zone for the next several months, is a continuation of phases one and two of the project completed on Willow and Cedar Streets over the past two years.

City engineer Howard Weston said the nature of the work on Thorsheim Street will be the same type of reconstruction work done in the first two phases of the project.

1 15 sec. "Replacing all the water ... sidewalks and new pavement.")

Weston said phase three of the project, to be done on Maple, was skipped over for another year due to Kodiak Electric Association's wind power project and the traffic it generates. He said work will begin on phase three after KEA has completed its project.

2 11 sec. "They've got a lot of truck
... to do phase three.")

The city has notified homeowners and businesses in the area of the work being done and is keeping them informed of the schedule, according to Weston. Brechan released a safety notice, urging people to use caution when walking or driving near the construction zone and to inform children not to walk through areas where crews are working. Weston said it's best to avoid the area altogether if at all possible and keep a vigilant eye out for exactly where crews are working on any given day for the duration of the project.

-- (Aleutian
3 11 sec. "They're starting work now ... paved out this year.")

Weston said he is impressed by the work Brechan did in phases one and two of the project. He said people need only drive down Willow or Cedar Streets to see firsthand the quality of work the local contractor is capable of. He said residents in the Thorsheim area can expect the same level of quality and courtesy.

-- (Aleutian
4 18 sec. "They did both of those two
... job in their neighborhood.")

Work on Thorsheim Street is expected to continue through November 15th, according to Weston. Phase one was completed on Willow Street two years ago, and Weston said Brechan is finishing the final landscaping for phase two now. He said all of the street and utility work on Cedar Street was completed last year.
